INVESTMENT ENVIRONMENT IN THE PATH WAY TO SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT IN VIETNAM

University of Economics and Business, Vietnam National University, Hanoi

Hanoi, Vietnam, November 2013

Sustainable development has been a common trend that the world is moving towards. The United Nations Conference on Sustainable development (UNCSD), known as Rio 2012, Rio+20, has stressed the importance of building a “green economy to achieve sustainable development”, which is also the vital objectives and strategies that Vietnam has tried to achieve. The Government of Vietnam already issued National Agenda 21 on orientation of sustainable development in Vietnam. In September 2012, the Vietnam’s green growth strategy in the period 2011-2020 and Vision to 2050 was approved, stressing that green growth is an important tasks to achieve sustainable, ensure the quick economic development and contribute to implement “National Climate Change Strategy”.

Vietnam has achieved its national target of becoming a middle income country by 2010 thanks to high economic growth rate in recent years. Nonetheless, there remains concern about the sustainability of Vietnam’s economic development, i.e. the quality of economic development, the emergence of social as well as environmental issues. Therefore, creating an investment environment to promote sustainable development in Vietnam is a vital issue that should be more thoroughly studied, investigated and exchanged, supporting Vietnam towards green economy in the coming time.
